Abstract (limited to 150 words)	Evidence synthesis is most valuable when it responds to the evidence needs of decision-makers. Various synthesis methodologies can play different roles in the process of ascertaining what that need is. As part of an externally funded project administered via the Ecosystem Services for Poverty Alleviation (ESPA) programme, we produced two rapid evidence assessments (REAs) on questions of priority to environmental decision-makers in sub-Saharan Africa. In this paper we discuss the findings of these two REAs focused on the following two questions: 1) what is the impact of different governance types in protected areas on ecosystem services and multi-dimensional poverty reduction in sub-Saharan Africa?; and 2) what is the impact of marine resources management on multi-dimensional poverty reduction in sub-Saharan Africa? We highlight commonalities of findings, and comment on methodological matters related to REAs on environmental evidence.
