Abstract (limited to 150 words)	CEEDER is a new development to be launched in 2018 as an open-access evidence service provided by CEE. It will collate all available evidence reviews (not only systematic reviews) at global scale, and relevant to environmental management. The service will provide a critical appraisal of the reliability of each evidence review, based on the limitations of the primary data available for the review and the conduct of the review itself, using the CEE Synthesis Appraisal Tool (CEESAT). CEDDER will provide users with a database from which to quickly find reviews relevant to their decision making and present information in a user-friendly format whilst also allowing further interrogation of each appraisal. This talk will introduce CEDDER and present current plans for how it will perform as an evidence service as well as the challenges for CEE of managing the project.
